Description

Division Street: America, Terkel's 1st book of oral history, established his reputation as America's foremost oral historian & as "one of those rare thinkers who is actually willing to go out & talk to the incredible people of this country" (Tom Wolfe). Viewing the inhabitants of a single city, Chicago, as a microcosm of the nation at large, Division Street chronicles the thoughts & feelings of some 70 people from widely varying backgrounds in terms of class, race & personal history. From a mother & son who migrated from Appalachia to a Native American boilerman, from a streetwise ex-gang leader to a liberal police officer, from the poorest blacks to the richest socialites, these unique, often intimate 1st-person accounts form a multifaceted collage that defies any simple stereotype of America. As Terkel himself put it "I was on the prowl for a cross-section of urban thought, using no one method or technique. I guess I was seeking some balance in the wildlife of the city as Rachel Carson sought it in nature." Revealing aspects of people's lives that are normally invisible to most of us, Division Street is a fascinating survey of a city & a society at a pivotal moment of the 20th century.

Insightful reviews

amy: I didn't think much of Studs Terkel's writing in the introduction, but as a listener--damn. His ear was his biggest strength as a journalist (as far as I can tell), and what makes this collection of horse's mouth stories so compelling.

Robert: Completely relevant to our times. A must read whether you live in Chicago or not. Terkel is never in the way or argumentative, he simply allows the voices of Division Street their say. Wonderfully engaging.

PJ: Like "Working," this is another fascinating cross-section of society given through interviews with everyday folks from all walks of life and taken during a tumultuous time (toward the end of the Vietnam war and in the midst of much civil rights activity in the US). Highly-recommended!

Eric: turns out without delay undying and but a interval piece. interesting how below the precise stipulations random humans do have a narrative to tell. a few higher than others, to be sure.

Brian: it is so humorous to learn lots of the interviews and continually remind myself that this e-book was once from 1965 now not yesterday. a very good instance of the way humans relatively are all alike in terms of their hopes, wants, distrusts, fears, and joys. not just for themselves, yet for his or her households ( specifically youngsters ), and the human race.

Missy: I discovered that i needed to be Studs Terkle whilst I develop up. a very good selection of the suggestions and views of all kinds of individuals facing an identical issue.
