Description

Golden girl: that was Amanda. Born into luxury, she was pampered, adored, spoiled, and very beautiful. She could have had any man she wanted. Millionaire Tom Merrill had been in love with her for years. But she chose Dart, tall, handsome, mining engineer. He was half-Indian, proud, and very poor.

Amanda had no idea what to expect as Dart's wife, an eastern stranger in the bleak little town of Lodestone, Arizona. But she found out soon enough. The people in the town hated her. And she hated the mines.

Then one day Amanda saw a chance to get away from all this - a chance to become rich beyond her dreams. The promise of gold which had driven many to madness now enslaved her. And she was willing to risk her life - and Dart's - to gain it.

Insightful reviews

Catherine: Ah, I love the old books. There just seems to be a quality of writing that is missing these days. This one has captivating characters, a strong sense of time and place (right after the stock market crash of 1929 in the American southwest), conflicts between an east-coast former rich girl and her new part-Indian husband and a vicious mining boss, and just enough romance without being icky. Perfect recipe for an escapist read that you don't have to feel guilty for.

Ellen: More interesting to read because I am visiting central Arizona where the book takes place.

Kate (Trojanhorse): Another well written book by Anya Seton. Enjoyable but a bit backwards, starts off with the couple's wedding and then they spend the book "finding their relationship".

Susan: This ebook was once okay yet somewhat a disappointment. I did not like every of the characters, specifically Amanda. Dart used to be probably the easiest yet too sturdy a person. I hated Dr. Hugh and questioned why Amanda beloved him so much. As for Amanda's obsession to seek for the gold it made no experience to me. And after they went and hunted for it the publication acquired crazy. Wow and this solved all their problems, although there has been no fortune to be found. I need to attempt her different books as readers say they're better.

Maura: one other favourite that I re-read each so often. an excellent tale approximately humans studying to dwell jointly regardless of very various backgrounds. he's so actual to his beliefs that he can't bend; she is so versatile that she turns out to lose her personal feel of self. This was once made right into a quite crappy B motion picture within the 50's or 60's that did not turn out to have any relation to the e-book except the name and it was once set in a western mining town.

Labmom: i cannot supply no stars or one superstar to Anya Seton, she's one among my favourite authors (I named my daughter Anya) and he or she wrote my all-time favourite publication (Green Darkness) yet this wasn't good. It did not thoroughly suck, however it wasn't even with reference to her different nine books, such a lot of that are excellent. i assume each continuously stable author has one undesirable book, or one that isn't nearly as good because the others. Even Shakespeare wrote a number of silly performs (Pericles, The Merry halves of Windsor). Toni Morrison, even, had a significantly panned booklet i could not get via (Paradise). So i am dissatisfied yet chuffed there are different books of hers to reread and luxuriate in and go directly to my Anya.
