Insightful reviews

MaryMargaret Kelly: This book is tremendous for any age, especially young. Anywhere from like 1-5, this book can become a favorite. I love that it interacts with the reader and that the reader can touch and smell and play with the book. It brings laughter, elements of touch and smell and it is just down right cute.

This book has soft and delicate colors. it is easy to look at and it still draws the child's eye to it. It is a great read aloud book with one or two children because it explains what is happening in the story and then the actual reader can do the same thing like patting the bunny or smelling the flowers. They get to be apart of the book and that is why they become so engaged.

Discussions for this book with older children can be what colors they see on the flower page, what the like about being able to touch and smell the book and it is also just a great book for new readers. It has very simple language that it can be a great practice book for a child just learning words.

Allison : I really like the interactiveness of this book. I'd really like to see it in a variety of formats because the only thing I don't like about it is the "Dick and Jane" blonde-haired purely Caucasian-ness of the characters. The world I live in, the world I've raised my children in, it's a very diverse one. I have a preference for diversity in the literature I read and that I recommend. One of the reasons animal characters are so fabulous in children's books is that they can defy classification. A giraffe is a giraffe. Even a patchwork elephant is still an elephant. Unfortunately, we humans haven't reached that point in our evolution where we can look at a person and just see a person and identify completely with that person regardless of their physical differences.

Jeremy: Bunnies disgust me.

Sarah: book Date: first released in 1940Annotation: little ones have interaction with the ebook via their senses(i.e. touch-fuzz, see-mirrors, etc.)Themes: Following DirectionsWays to Use: scholars may possibly perform various arms on sensory actions after which learn the story. the category may possibly then determine and label different emotions of items they explored.

David: Pat the Bunny by Dorothy Kunhardt (Golden Books 1940)(Nonfiction - Children's) is the 1st booklet that my first baby used to be in a position to engage with! it is a tactile satisfaction for babies and toddlers; the pages have quite a few materials and treatments attached, and every is made to be touched by means of smooth little fingers! For instance, the booklet isn't really a few rabbit named "Pat;" it is an guideline to the listener as in "Pat/touch the image of the bunny at the web page that is made up of gentle curly wool." one other web page exhibits an image of a daddy consoling an infant; the caption reads, "Touch Daddy's scratchy face" which at the web page is made from sandpaper. My 3 children all enjoyed this booklet to bits - literally. We do not have a duplicate that used to be in a position to continue to exist childhood! I hugely suggest this for brand spanking new mom and dad and babies! My rating: 8/10, accomplished 2003.

Emma: I learn this with my cousin JD:-) I do not recognize what was once extra fun...reading this lovely book, or seeing how chuffed it made my perhaps cousin!!!! I feel seeing my cousin so happy:-)
